The "Why"

Everyday, the "average American" consumes refined, "dead" food products that are of such low nutritional value that they do as much (or potentially more) harm to the body as good. Add to that the possibility that you may be playing host to any number of parasites - which thrive on the "average American" diet - and you can certainly see why detoxification is important.

The fact is, even though the human body has not changed that much over the last few thousand years, our diet has, and dramatically. With the advent of food processing techniques, we've become a species that consumes less of the foods that are natural (and naturally good for us), and more of the foods that are "handy," ready-made and easy to prepare. In essence, we've sacrificed quality for convenience and the price, though often not immediately visible, is a severely high one.

Eating too much animal protein, fatty and fried foods and foods made with white sugar, white flour or white rice will - even over short periods of time - compromise your body's natural elimination cycle. Indeed, if you are not having at least one good bowel movement per day, you're already on the road to disease!

The colon - also known as the "large intestine" - is about five feet long and only two-and-a-half inches in diameter. Its job is to absorb some nutrients and water into our bodies and to complete the final steps of the elimination of toxic wastes through regular bowel movements. When the bowel is impacted, however, problems arise such as constipation, hemorrhoids, ulcerative colitis and colon cancer (the second leading cause of death in the United States today). Common symptoms resulting from accumulated toxins in the bowel can include headaches, bad breath, allergy symptoms, PMS, fatigue, depression, irritability, bloating, and frequent infections.

Independent Hoodia Report & Product Comparisons

After months of investigation and vigorous testing we were able to uncover the true facts behind leading hoodia products being sold today. Below you will find informative, factual information about hoodia and a side by side analysis report showing attributes and characteristics of the top-10 hoodia products listed in order of popularity.

About Hoodia

Authentic hoodia is one of the rarest botanicals in the world. It is a cactus like plant that grows exclusively in South Africa. Scientists have isolated several compounds in hoodia that help suppress appetite. It contains a molecule called P57 that is 10,000 times as active as glucose. It goes to the mid-brain and makes those nerve cells feel as if you are full and this in turn stunts the appetite. It basically tricks the brain into thinking that you are full. To date, there are no known adverse side effects caused by the use of hoodia.

Beware of Fake Hoodia

Having what looks or even just reads as a 3rd party review often doubles and even triples conversion rates while at the same time usually increasing costs only 50-75% - this powerful trick used by companies to "double list" themselves in Google is a VERY smart move if you're already profiting with any advertising campaign.
